

Creating a Feedback Friendly Culture

How to effectively give and receive feedback

This workshop provides an opportunity for teachers to gain a greater knowledge and understanding of the fundamental skills required to be effective in delivering clear messages that impact and influence behaviour, skills and performance.

We will explore specific models to ensure that giving and receiving feedback becomes a valued and constructive experience at your school. At all levels; peer, student and parent, the ability to communicate specific messages whilst also building a relationship of trust and integrity can be challenging. This workshop will provide teachers at your school with practical strategies that they can implement immediately to achieve this.

What would be different in your school if teachers had;

- an understanding of what makes feedback a constructive rather than a destructive experience?
- the skills to deliver constructive feedback that influences behaviour, skills and performance?
- a specific model they could use to give feedback to colleagues, parents and students?
- the ability to receive feedback and use the information gained to improve performance?
- the belief that feedback was a gift?

This workshop covers:

- the role of feedback in improving performance
- strategies for giving and receiving feedback effectively
- specific models for giving and receiving feedback effectively
- listening and questioning skills that work
- strategies to gain and build trust and credibility
- have fun applying your learning in an experiential activity

Prices vary depending on the number of participants, travel required and duration of the workshop.

Please call Inspirational Coaching to discuss your school's specific needs and create a learning experience they won't forget.